Two become one: Nuindie tango's two-part lamp shade offers a wide range of applications.

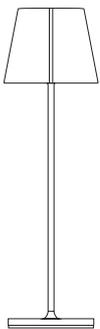

Nuindie tango

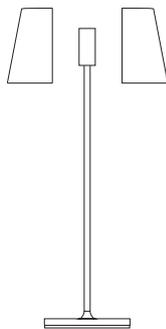

Swinging flexibility

It takes two to tango: Nuindie tango is our first rechargeable lamp with a lamp shade that can be split in the middle. For even more flexibility and a wider range of applications – as table lamp or wall lamp. The most dynamic of the Nuindies: Not only does the tango have a rotatable lamp shade, but both halves of the lamp can also be rotated against each other or fixed to the wall independently of each other and controlled separately. With its new soft-touch surface, the Nuindie tango is pleasing both to the eye and to the hand.

The Nudrop's design language was inspired by Bouillotte lamps. These were not only found on the desks of philosophers of the Enlightenment, but later also in US law firms and even in the White House. But in terms of technology and colouring, the Nudiderot is absolutely modern.

Nudiderot

Enlightening Homage

It is easy to imagine how Denis Diderot and other great French intellectuals of the 18th century sat hunched over their manuscripts in the light of their candlesticks and struggled for Enlightenment. The Sigor Nudiderot is an homage to a lamp shape that was particularly popular at the time – and which then spread to the whole world in the wake of the Empire style: the Bouillotte lamp. And so today, as in the past, it is a truth universally acknowledged that clever minds can also be recognized by the lamp on their table.

Nudiderot
Rechargeable Table Lamp
160 x 420 mm [W x H]

Having a safe grip on a lamp was once even more important than today – as it were fire-hazardous candles that provided the light. And even today, people enjoy the practical round handles of the Nudiderot.

With the right light, reading and studying is also easier: Whereas the burning time of candlesticks used to be very limited, the Nudiderot now provides up to 12 hours of ambient light.

“Until the end of the 19th century, only candles were available – therefore, all lights had to provide light without being dangerous, and at the same time they had to live up to aesthetic standards. Therefore, these lights were equipped with various devices – to prevent them from going up in flames, to make smoke less harmful or to collect wax. The lamp shades were made of metal to prevent them catching fire. One of these types of luminaires is called a “bouillotte” in France. I have simplified it somewhat and adapted it to the design of contemporary furniture.”
